By Joliet Lasing-Jordan

THE SURGING STOCKS in the Philippine stock market have not been enough to give the majority of Filipinos a sense of optimism, says a lawmaker.

Rep. Antonio Trilla Jr. (Luzon-1st) said that the majority of Filipinos are still poor and that the stock market is not a reflection of the country's economic condition.

Trilla said that the majority of Filipinos are still poor and that the stock market is not a reflection of the country's economic condition. He said that the majority of Filipinos are still poor and that the stock market is not a reflection of the country's economic condition.

Schell et al. published in the November 19, 2003 issue of the journal. The letter stated that the article had been found to contain several errors and that the authors were being asked to provide a correction. The authors responded to the letter by providing a detailed explanation of the errors and a corrected version of the article. The publisher accepted the authors' explanation and published the corrected article in the March 3, 2004 issue of the journal. The authors are grateful to the publisher for their prompt response and to the readers of the journal for their understanding.

Figure 1 is a line graph showing the effect of the concentration of the inhibitor on the rate of polymerization. The x-axis is labeled "Inhibitor concentration (mole/l)" and ranges from 0 to 0.001. The y-axis is labeled "Rate of polymerization (mole/l·hr)" and ranges from 0 to 0.001. The curve starts at a rate of approximately 0.0008 at zero inhibitor concentration and decreases sharply as the inhibitor concentration increases, reaching a rate of about 0.0001 at 0.001 mole/l inhibitor concentration.

the 1980s, the 1990s, and the 2000s. The 1980s saw a significant increase in the number of people working in the service sector, which was driven by a combination of factors, including a decline in manufacturing and a rise in the service economy. The 1990s saw a similar trend, with a continued increase in the service sector and a decline in manufacturing. The 2000s saw a further increase in the service sector, with a continued decline in manufacturing. This trend is expected to continue in the future, with the service sector becoming an even more important part of the economy.

There is a significant negative correlation between the number of years of education and the number of years of experience. This suggests that as the number of years of education increases, the number of years of experience tends to decrease.

It is a simple idea, but it has not been fully explored. It is about as simple as it gets. It is something that we have all done at one time or another. It is something that we have all done at one time or another. It is something that we have all done at one time or another.
